Jack is a litigator whose practice focuses on construction law and civil litigation.

He works with public bodies and private enterprises in a range of matters, from claims arising on construction projects to shareholder disputes. His clients include contractors, owners, municipalities, and businesses in a variety of sectors.

Jack takes a pragmatic, solution-oriented approach to his work and is driven to help his clients achieve successful and practical results. He acts for both plaintiffs and defendants throughout the litigation process, from when a dispute arises through to resolution whether it is negotiated or litigated.

Within the firm, Jack's work ethic, reliability, and thoroughness have made him a sought after lawyer for litigation teams working on complex and high-value litigation matters, including issues arising from large construction and infrastructure projects.

Jack articulated with a large international firm in Ontario before relocating to Edmonton and joining RMRF in 2017.
